The Bank of Malawi is a subsidiary of The Bank of Tanzania Limited and the Reserve Bank of Malawi. The Bank of Malawi implements a floating exchange rate, pegged to the Tanzanian shilling at a rate of K15.85. This is formally linked to the rate of the Tanzanian shilling determined by the International Monetary Fund every three months, but in practice is subject to short-term fluctuations. History The Reserve Bank of Malawi was established in 1974 following the independence of Malawi. At the time the Bank of Malawi was under the purview of the Central Bank of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, and its constitution was effectively identical to that of the Bank of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, and the Banque de l'Union des États de l'Afrique Centrale (BUEAC), with the exception of the name and the national symbol. Under the Federation, the institution had a monopoly on monetary policy and controls exchange rates and the currency. On 15 January 1977, the Malawi Union of African Associations was established, and Malawi became a republic. On 20 June 1977, the National Independence Day celebrations, Malawi officially became the Republic of Malawi. In August 1977, the first Malawian shilling was introduced to replace the Rhodesia shilling, which had been in circulation since the declaration of independence. In 1980, the Malawi pound became the unofficial currency of the country. On 1 July 1982, the Bank of Malawi became a fully independent central bank. In August 1982, the Malawi dollar was adopted as the official currency

Danko Jones Discography 19992010rarrar[Prevention of cancer by aggressive surgical resection. A concept for the broadening of indications for surgery]. The main therapy for head and neck cancer is still surgery. For the majority of these tumors, even advanced stages of disease, 5-year survival can be achieved by radical surgery with or without additional radio- or chemotherapy. The aim of this study is to establish a concept for the broadening of the indications for surgical treatment of head and neck cancer. Indications for surgery must be considered with due consideration for functional impairment in the future.

Based on data from the literature, a classification system has been developed which specifies the goals and limits of the surgical approach. In contrast to the traditional focus on oncologic criteria, surgical therapy should now consider patient-related aspects, particularly the ability to eat and drink after surgery. In advanced and recurrent tumors, the aim of surgical therapy should be to improve patients' quality of life and to retain their ability to eat and drink. The use of new radiation techniques with a narrow margin to sparing normal tissue represents an option in addition to the surgical therapy.Q: How to make a webpage user-friendly for large text size I have an html webpage with different text sizes for different users to choose from. The situation is that some users have much larger fonts than others and with larger fonts the content is much easier to read. Is there any way to keep the page user-friendly for all user browsers? A: I'm going to assume you're speaking of something like this: Testing Different Font Sizes @font-face { font-family
